

Life Activity Calendar

Personal Injury

The Personal Injury Life Activity Calendar© is a custom, three-panel chart, available in three sizes, that graphically summarizes the lifestyle changes that occur in situations involving personal injury.

A simple checklist provided by Robert W. Johnson & Associates helps gather information about the plaintiff's activities both before and after the incident. Based on this information, the Personal Injury Life Activity Calendar compares typical before and after years to illustrate the negative impact of the injury on lifestyle of the plaintiff.

The Personal Injury Life Activity Calendar powerfully summarizes the permanent debilitating effect of injury. The Life Activity Calendar speaks even when the injured party cannot, graphically illustrating the plaintiff's loss, which the Jury Instruction tasks the jury to compensate.

Life Activity Key

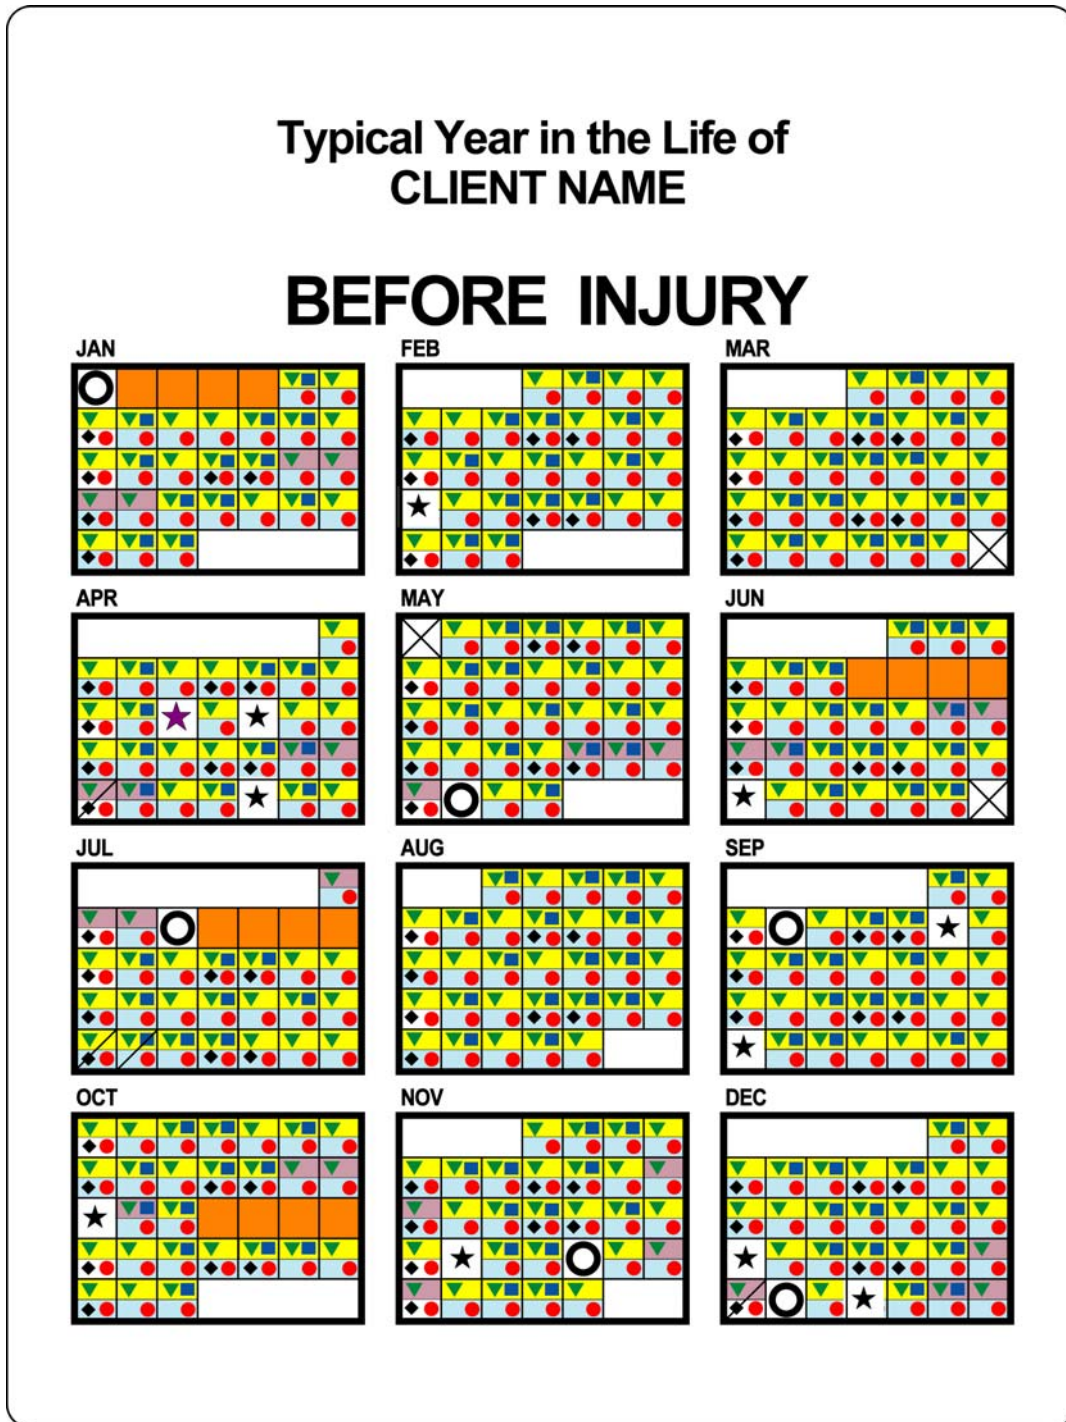

Every person engages in assorted activities in life – some related to work or professional responsibilities, other activities related to hobbies or personal enjoyment, and other activities related to family life and home responsibilities. The first panel (key) of the Life Activity Calendar begins by summarizing the typical activities of the plaintiff that have been negatively impacted by the injury, and assigns color codes that designate those activities that are used in the subsequent panels.

Typical Activities Before Injury

The second panel (before injury) of the Life Activity Calendar shows a typical year, populated with the colors and symbols that illustrate the plaintiff's negatively-impacted, pre-injury activities. The Calendar shows how active the person was in these various areas of their life.

Contrast After Injury

A sharp contrast is drawn in the third and final panel, which illustrates the loss suffered by the plaintiff after the injury. The diminished level of activities in the final panel fully paints the picture of the loss suffered by the plaintiff.
